Thank you for your interest in attending ACRP’s Workforce Development Global Roundtable, hosted by the Association’s Partners Advancing the Clinical Research Workforce consortium. This hybrid meeting will connect industry stakeholders who share a deep interest in building the next generation of clinical research professionals and a diverse, research-ready workforce. The meeting objectives are to:

- Review the state of the clinical research workforce and the need for action
- Share perspectives from a range of industry stakeholders
- Conduct an initial assessment on prioritization of initiatives
- Take the pulse on commitment for support

PRELIMINARY AGENDA

Welcome & Why We Are Here Review the connection between the clinical research workforce to quality and safety, further define the challenge faced by the industry, and discuss the importance of evidence to drive change.

The Professionalization of The Clinical Research Workforce Speak to building an identity for the clinical research profession, a review of academic programs in support of building a clinical research workforce, the global CRO perspective on workforce development, and the site perspective.

Getting Started: Where We Are Today & Where We Want to Go Review barriers, current progress, existing efforts, and innovative programs to tackle workforce challenges.

Metrics Matter Brainstorm and gain alignment on key elements and critical success measures for global workforce development initiatives. Consider ways to benchmark progress and periodically reassess.

Next Steps Document ways to work together in a precompetitive space to support a global initiative to drive and develop a research-ready clinical research workforce. Pledge commitment to engage your company or organization.
